s 22(1)

1. Fair Work Court

- The first idea has been around for a long time and was a recommendation of the small claims review. That is the concept of a specialist Fair Work Court to hear and determine workplace relations matters under Cth laws.
- Both workers and employers want fast, accessible, fair and effective resolution of disputes, and it goes without saying that current court processes can be slow and costly for all.
- The workplace relations context is unique, in that time really is of the essence when it comes to resolving workplace disputes – time is money, for both sides.
- The PM will announce this reform at a high-level this morning, and we will then commence a detailed consultation on the key features of the court – we genuinely want this to improve the workplace relations dispute resolution system for everyone.
